Memory Loss Pilot Programs Launching
BONUS: 2012 Pullout Calendar
New Year, Fresh Start
At the end of every year when the plans are laid out for the upcoming year, I think to myself, “This is going to be a big year for Lyngblomsten.” If that’s been true in the past, then 2012 is going to be a gargantuan year! There are new services launching (read about the early memory loss services on page 7), senior ministry and parish ministry resource networks being built, a re-envisioned café and gift shop being planned (see page 9), physical plant improvements, and many, many more projects in the works—all designed to meet our mission of enhancing the quality of life for older adults. I look forward to sharing with you the stories of progress and impact.

The start of a new year often signals the start of transformations. Perhaps you noticed there is a new look to Lyngblomsten Lifestyle magazine. We are making some fairly significant changes to our publication and decided it was a good time to refresh the look as well. Based on feedback from our reader survey as well as our plan to fully embrace social media in the year ahead, we have modified the publication schedule for the print edition of Lifestyle, producing only two full issues annually plus a special (holiday) edition.

I am always so grateful to those people who invite us into their lives and allow us to share their stories with others. In this edition, we focus on creativity and aging. You’ll meet four older adults who talk about their involvement in our Artful Living with Lyngblomsten program (story begins on page 3). I hope their stories inspire you to embrace the arts and to infuse even more creativity into your life—be it through the arts or in other ways. Don’t miss the opportunities to learn more about creativity and aging presented on page 5.

May your 2012 be filled with many blessings, boundless creativity, and opportunities pursued,

P.S. I’m always glad to hear from our readers—whether you want to suggest a person’s story to feature, offer constructive feedback, or tell me about something from the magazine that inspired you to act. Contact me at (651) 632-5324 or pmontgomery@lyngblomsten.org.

Creativity matters
Incorporate creativity into your life for a healthier, happier you

by Christina Rhein

“Every child is an artist. The problem is how to remain an artist once we grow up.” —Pablo Picasso

Although there can be many losses in later life, it may be surprising to learn that creativity is not one of them. In fact, studies show that creativity often flourishes as we age.1 Take, for example, Oscar Hammerstein II who was 65 years old when he wrote the lyrics to accompany Richard Rodgers’ music for The Sound of Music. At the age of 75, Helen Keller published Teacher in honor of her miracle-worker teacher, Annie Sullivan. George Friedrich Handel suffered a stroke when he was 52 but went on to create Messiah five years later, and at age 65 he composed Jephthah. Architect Frank Lloyd Wright designed the famous Fallingwater—a house projecting out over a waterfall—at age 69. He later designed the Guggenheim Museum in New York at age 91. While creativity is often relegated to the world of the young, it is important to know that we have the opportunity to create once we “grow up.”

There is a vital relationship between creative expression and the quality of life for older adults. According to Gene Cohen, M.D., Ph.D., founder of the Washington, D.C., Center on Aging, the very act of engaging one’s mind in creative endeavors directly affects health in positive ways. In 2001, Cohen undertook a study of 150 adults ages 65 to 100 to examine the effects of various pursuits on their well-being. The control group was engaged in noncreative community activities, and the other group participated in community-based art programs taught by professionals. After one year, Cohen found that the group engaged in creative activities—such as painting or singing in a choir, had started fewer new medications, experienced fewer falls, and made fewer doctor’s visits than the control group. This landmark study showed the powerful impact of creative activities through brain stimulation, stress reduction, and the overall improvements in physical and mental health.

Creativity can take many forms and serves as a powerful way to engage older adults in self-expression, enabling them to create works that honor their life experiences. One way Lyngblomsten encourages creativity is through Artful Living with LyngblomstenTM. In support of Lyngblomsten’s mission to enhance the quality of life for older adults, the Artful Living program offers access to fine arts events, workshops by resident artists, and celebrations of creativity for older adults at Lyngblomsten and in the community, thereby enhancing lives, igniting creativity, and driving passion toward living full and healthy lives.

“Thank you, Lyngblomsten’s approach appears unique,” stated Daniel Gabriel, Director of Arts Programming at COMPAS, an arts organization partner with the Artful Living program. “First of all, by running focus groups that brought a range of stakeholders to the table, Lyngblomsten staff ensured that the art projects undertaken were ones that would generate interest.”

Lyngblomsten has collaborated with numerous premier arts organizations to provide the professional expertise for each art form. Pat Samples, Coordinator for arts partner Minnesota Creative Arts and Aging Network, shared that “Artful Living is a shining example of an arts learning program for older adults. I’m very impressed because it’s rare for a senior-serving organization to invest so fully in making the arts a priority within their services.”

A survey after the first year of the Artful Living program showed that for nearly 43 percent of the participants, this was the very first time they had access to an arts program.

Meet a few participants of Artful Living with Lyngblomsten as they share their special experiences and discuss what this program has meant to them.

Bob Ogren, Watercolor Artist
Bob Ogren, a 90-year-old local community member, has participated in three watercolor classes through the Artful Living program. Bob’s wife talked him into trying the watercolor classes, and now he is thankful that she did. When he first started the classes, he intended to only attend one or two sessions to see what they were like.

Winnie Johnson, Vocal Artist

Retired pastor Winnie Johnson is a 95-year-old tenant at The Heritage at Lyngblomsten and has been an active participant in the MacPhail Music for Life℠ vocal classes offered through Artful Living with Lyngblomsten. As an advocate of the classes for others around campus, Winnie was eager to share his experience. “I have been sort of the apostle in getting more people involved, especially men,” Winnie said. “I’m always talking about it and trying to get residents involved.” He believes it’s a great opportunity for anybody who wants to have an enjoyable time and learn something. Winnie performed with the Music for Life℠ group at Lyngblomsten’s Tree Lighting Ceremony in December and proclaimed, “It became a sense of accomplishment to do something and contribute and help other people enjoy something.” He tells anyone who is hesitant to join the class that you don’t have to know how to sing. “The teachers are there to teach you to use what you already have.” He added, “Most of it, it’s a place to do something different, to get out and see other people, and to keep growing.”

Geraldine Coleman & Ruth New, Vocal Artists

Geraldine Coleman and Ruth New are both residents at Lyngblomsten Care Center and have often participated in the MacPhail Music for Life℠ classes together. Geraldine shared her enthusiasm for singing and what it has meant to her throughout her life. “We [her family] always sang just for amusement. On Christmas Eve when I was a little girl, our whole family would sing Christmas hymns until three in the morning,” she reminisced. Geraldine still has a passion for singing. “Sometimes you might just catch me humming in my room. I just like to sing!” she said smiling.

Ruth has also enjoyed singing most of her life and as a teenager was involved in a glee club. Now she often recruits other residents to join the music classes and hopes to soon help organize a group to go off campus and perform for others. Ruth has a positive attitude about staying active and participating in new activities, and the music classes have given her an opportunity to do just that. “I love it. It’s just a lot of fun and I wouldn’t give it up for a million dollars!” she said spiritedly. She was also proud to share that she sang a solo at the Tree Lighting Ceremony. Ruth is excited for the next series of classes to begin and looks forward to encouraging even more residents to participate with her.

The Remembrance Tree is a way to make a permanent remembrance of your loved one with a gold, silver, or bronze leaf. For further information or if you have questions about this list, contact Mary Grupa at (651) 632-5324 or mgrupa@lyngblomsten.org.
The process of creating, as well as the art that is created, has transformed these participants and the people around them, including other Artful Living participants, family members, caregivers, those who experience their art, and even the employees at Lyngblomsten.

For our employees, Lyngblomsten strives to foster an environment that encourages compassionate caregiving, innovative thinking, problem-solving, and opportunity seeking. --One of Lyngblomsten’s Four Guiding Principles

With a knack for opportunity-seeking and connecting people, Lyngblomsten employee Melanie Davis (Director of Volunteer Services and Corporate Engagement), was “off and running” in 2010 after having lunch with Bob Olsen, a friend from church. Bob, the Executive Director of COMPASS, shared the life-changing work their organization was doing related to the arts in healthcare settings. Several meetings later with other staff as well as with community arts organizations, plus a few focus groups and an arts grant opportunity, together paved the way for what has become the Artful Living with Lyngblomsten program.

Iris Shiraishi from Mu Performing Arts, the arts partner that brought Taiko Drumming to the Artful Living program, applauded the efforts of Lyngblomsten staff, commenting, “I can’t say enough about how much thought and careful consideration Melanie Davis and the staff committee put into this Artful Living program. It is because of each of them and the support of the Lyngblomsten community that this program has and will continue to thrive.” In addition, Jeanie Brindley-Barnett, co-founder of arts partner MacPhail Music for Life™ agreed saying, “I’ve never seen a more committed, amazing group of staff. They really jumped in full force, got everyone on board, and gave this a team approach. Staff and volunteers showed a willingness to try and explore this, and they approached this program with unbridled enthusiasm to work together and make it happen. It’s about togetherness.”

To continue efforts to foster long-term growth and the success of Artful Living with Lyngblomsten, Lyngblomsten is launching a study in January intended to measure and evaluate basic health-related outcomes of participants in the program. Like Cohen’s research suggests, there is a rich relationship between creativity and aging. Creativity contributes to physical health as we age. Creativity strengthens our morale later in life. Creativity enriches relationships. Creativity is our greatest legacy.¹

The Creativity Game

Roll a die at least once a day and carry out the activity on the square on which you land (Example: You roll a 2, so you’ll e-mail or write a letter to someone). Earn 5 points each time you complete the activity. Leave a small object as a “marker” on the square you land on, and roll again, moving forward from that square. Earn 20 bonus points each time you pass the “Start” square.

When you reach 1,000 points, give yourself a special reward—a trip, a book, a day away—but the most exciting reward will be the sense of vitality, community, and self-esteem you’ll gain through the activities themselves.

Michael writes, “My years of experience have shown me conclusively the establishment of an innovative culture must come before the introduction of tools...culture works. A culture of innovation is sustainable and long term” (p. 27). This struck a positive note with me as Lyngblomsten has been developing a culture of innovation for 106 years in order to provide exceptional services for older adults in our community. This has never been more true than today. We are able to create and sustain these programs due to our great staff, as well as the faithful donors, volunteers and partners who support our innovation. By Dale M. Fagre

At Lyngblomsten, the term innovation is a part of our culture. Dictionary.com defines innovation as “something new or different introduced.” In fact, the word “innovative” is in our mission statement. Lyngblomsten has used innovation to develop many programs and services, including our newest creation, Artful Living with Lyngblomsten, which is rapidly growing and involving hundreds of folks. Over the years as well as today, innovation is present throughout our home-and community-based programs: 5-5-1 Club, The Gathering, Care Team Ministry, Parish Nurse Ministry, and Community Wellness & Education. Plus, I think it’s also safe to say that innovation remains key in managing the day-to-day activities of our residential services.

Keynote presentation: Life is a Work of Art
There is a “use it or lose it” principle for cognitive ability—if we stimulate our brains, we continue to grow dendrites, even in old age. This is a presentation about the power of creativity in later life, using a combination of research, personal stories, and vivid illustrations.

Presenter Lucy Rose Fischer, PhD, award-winning gerontologist, author, and artist, shares her own experience of launching her art career around age 60 when she asked herself: How old do I have to be to follow my dream?

Lyngblomsten recognizes the need to support individuals living with memory loss. This includes supporting their caregivers. As more individuals are being diagnosed earlier with Alzheimer’s and other dementias, education and support can be beneficial for both the individual with the disease and their family members. Both are seeking ways to continue living their lives in meaningful and productive ways by taking care of their holistic health—mind, body and spirit. In an effort to expand its services to those with memory loss, Lyngblomsten Home- and Community-Based Services is introducing two new memory loss pilot programs: Early Memory Loss Group and Caregiver Coaching.

Early Memory Loss (EML) Group

This early memory loss service is a proactive, educational program providing memory-building exercises and social support for people in early stages of memory loss. The EML Group will help decrease isolation and promote being engaged in life as much as possible for the longest period of time. Participants can talk and share confidence with others who have similar memory issues. Opportunities to socialize and problem-solve together, share experiences, and create bonds make the group an invaluable source of support.

Benefits of an early memory loss program include: increased knowledge of stress management techniques, decreased depression, a support system outside the family, increased self-esteem, strengthened brain function, and much more. Plus, the EML Group provides educational and social support services for participants’ families.

Caregiver Coaching

Caregiver Coaching is a personalized service that equips family caregivers with knowledge, skills, and the tools needed to develop themselves and enrich their roles as caregivers. Study ends... re-envisioned service begins; yum!

by Patricia Montgomery

A two-year study of whether café-style dining would draw larger numbers of lunch patrons to Lyngblomsten’s community center, the 5-5-1 Club, has been completed. The findings from the venture will bring a change to the amenities on campus in mid-2012.

For the last several years across the country, there has been a trend of dwindling participation in congregate dining (where everyone eats the same meal at the same, designated time) at senior centers. A similar decline was also experienced with our community center. To reverse the decline at our community center, café-style dining was launched with the 5-5-1 Club & Café as a pilot study in 2009. Aligning with our limited resources, we created a simple lunch menu available three days a week and set out to learn whether older adults living in the 551 zip code areas would partake of café-style dining on the Lyngblomsten campus. We also wanted to ascertain whether having café-style lunches at the community center would increase the number of people participating in other activities offered by the club. The longer range vision, following the pilot with this “practice café,” was to move the café/community center to a location in the community—off the Lyngblomsten campus.

During the café pilot, folks from the community participated, but not in great numbers. Location is everything, and we were not surprised that café-style dining was not a big draw for folks living near the Lyngblomsten campus.

What did surprise us, however, was the response from folks living, working, or visiting on campus. The 5-5-1 Café proved to be a convenient lunch option for staff, a conducive place to hold lunch meetings with project partners and committee members, an alternative meal choice for tenants, and a nice place for families to “go out to eat” with their loved ones without the hassle of transporting them off campus.

Seeing how much folks on campus found the 5-5-1 Café to be useful and enjoyable, plans are in the works for a re-envisioned Lyngblomsten Gift & Coffee Shop in its current location near the chapel on main floor. The grand re-opening is tentatively planned for the first week of July. If you’d like to participate but on the new café menu and gift shop product lines, take the café/gift shop survey which will be posted online later in January. Go to www.lyngblomsten.org/news-events/newsletters and click the survey link under Lyngblomsten Lifestyle.

The current café at the 5-5-1 Club will operate until late June, and the new café/gift shop will open in early July. After June, the non-café activities of the 5-5-1 Club (e.g., classes, outings, Friday special meals) will continue to be held at the Club in its current location on campus. Additional consultants, and purpose.

Lyngblomsten recognizes the need to support individuals living with memory loss. This includes supporting their caregivers. As more individuals are being diagnosed earlier with Alzheimer’s and other dementias, education and support can be beneficial for both the individual with the disease and their family members.

Both are seeking ways to continue living their lives in meaningful and productive ways by taking care of their holistic health—mind, body and spirit. In an effort to expand its services to those with memory loss, Lyngblomsten Home- and Community-Based Services is introducing two new memory loss pilot programs: Early Memory Loss Group and Caregiver Coaching.

Early Memory Loss (EML) Group

This early memory loss service is a proactive, educational program providing memory-building exercises and social support for people in early stages of memory loss. The EML Group will help decrease isolation and promote being engaged in life as much as possible for the longest period of time. Participants can talk and share in confidence with others who have similar memory issues. Opportunities to socialize and problem-solve together, share experiences, and create bonds make the group an invaluable source of support.

Benefits of an early memory loss program include: increased knowledge of stress management techniques, decreased depression, a support system outside the family, increased self-esteem, strengthened brain function, and much more. The EML Group provides educational and social support services for participants’ families.

Caregiver Coaching

Caregiver Coaching is a personalized service that equips family caregivers with knowledge, skills, and the tools needed to develop themselves and enrich their roles as caregivers. The program will assist caregivers in navigating through the difficult decisions and uncertainties people with memory loss and their families face at every stage of the disease.

Benefits of Caregiver Coaching include: tools to organize and cope with your situation, a customized care plan document, evaluation of what you do well and what you need help with, decreased stress and depression, and more.

Lyngblomsten = Innovation

At Lyngblomsten, the term innovation is a part of our culture. Dictionary.com defines innovation as “something new or different introduced.” In fact, the word “innovative” is in our mission statement. Lyngblomsten has used innovation to develop many programs and services, including our newest creation, Artful Living with Lyngblomsten, which is rapidly growing and involving hundreds of folks. Over the years as well as today, innovation is present throughout our home-and community-based programs: 5-5-1 Club, The Gathering, Care Team Ministry, Parish Nurse Ministry, and Community Wellness & Education. Plus, I think it’s also safe to say that innovation remains key in managing the day-to-day activities of our residential services.

Recently, Lyngblomsten Foundation Board member Michael Dugan released his new book titled, Saving Innovation: How to Harness the Incredible Promise of Innovation. Michael writes, “My years of experience have shown me conclusively the establishment of an innovative culture must come before the introduction of tools...culture works. A culture of innovation is sustainable and long term” (p. 27). This struck a positive note with me as Lyngblomsten has been developing a culture of innovation for 106 years in order to provide exceptional services for older adults in our community. This has never been more true than today. We are able to create and sustain these programs due to our great staff, as well as the faithful donors, volunteers and partners who support our innovation. We thank you all for your support and invite you to continue supporting innovation at Lyngblomsten in 2012.

For information, please contact Dale Fagre, Chief Development Officer, at (651) 632-5319 or dfagre@lyngblomsten.org.
The process of creating, as well as the art that is created, has transformed these participants and the people around them, including other Artful Living participants, family members, caregivers, those who experience their art, and even the employees at Lyngblomsten.

For our employees, Lyngblomsten strives to foster an environment that encourages compassionate caregiving, innovative thinking, problem-solving, and opportunity seeking.

—One of Lyngblomsten’s Four Guiding Principles

With a knack for opportunity-seeking and connecting people, Lyngblomsten employee Melanie Davis (Director of Volunteer Services and Corporate Engagement), was “off and running” in 2010 after having lunch with Bob Olsen, a friend from church. Bob, the Executive Director of COMPAS, shared the life-changing work their organization was doing related to the arts in healthcare settings. Several meetings later with other staff as well as with community arts organizations, plus a few focus groups and an arts grant opportunity, together paved the way for what has become the Artful Living with Lyngblomsten program.

Iris Shiraishi from Mu Performing Arts, the arts partner that brought Taiko Drumming to the Artful Living program, applauded the efforts of Lyngblomsten staff, commenting, “I can’t say enough about how much thought and careful consideration Melanie Davis and the staff committee put into this Artful Living program. It is because of each of them and the support of the Lyngblomsten community that this program has and will continue to thrive.” In addition, Jeannie Brindley-Barnett, co-founder of arts partner MacPhail Music for Life™ agreed saying, “I’ve never seen a more committed, amazing group of staff. They really jumped in full force, got everyone on board, and gave this a team approach. Staff and volunteers showed a willingness to try and explore this, and they approached this program with unbridled enthusiasm to work together and make it happen. It’s about togetherness.”

To continue efforts to foster long-term growth and the success of Artful Living with Lyngblomsten, Lyngblomsten is launching a study in January intended to measure and evaluate basic health-related outcomes of participants in the program. Like Cohen’s research suggests, there is a rich relationship between creativity and aging. Creativity contributes to physical health as we age. Creativity strengthens our morale later in life. Creativity enriches relationships. Creativity is our greatest legacy.

Sharing the Light of Lyngblomsten

On December 6, 2011, Lyngblomsten welcomed in the Christmas season along with 200 residents and guests in the Newman-Benson Chapel. Guests enjoyed singing a host of familiar Christmas songs, and of course, all were treated to the traditional tree lighting. The program featured The Joyful Ringers from Como Lutheran Church (photo left), Lyngblomsten’s Artful Living singers supported by MacPhail Music Center’s Music For Life (photo middle), and, finally, Leslye Orr from Dreamland Arts performed “A Christmas Memory” by Truman Capote (photo right). Funds raised from the Lights for Lyngblomsten campaign will support general programming. Thank you for your generosity!

Harvest: The Time of This Life

About 100 guests attended this cocktail hour event on October 13, 2011, at The Saint Paul Hotel. Featured was the Artful Living with Lyngblomsten™ program, along with several program participants. More than $12,000 was raised to help fund this growing program in 2012.

Jazzed About Our Supporters: Recognition Event

About 250 people attended this first-time combined recognition event held November 10, 2011, integrating several constituent groups that Lyngblomsten has traditionally honored through various separate events. Prior to the dinner and program, Paul Mikelisen, President/CEO, hosted over 100 guests at a VIP champagne reception. Recognized during the program were President’s Club donors ($1,000+); Heritage Society members (planned gifts); volunteers (various levels of hours served); and, our corporate partners. A special honor and recognition was given to the Lyngblomsten Auxiliary who celebrated 50 years of service. Over 30 Auxiliary members were present to be recognized (photo right).

The Creativity Game

Roll a die at least once a day and carry out the activity on the square on which you land. (Example: You roll a 2, so you’d e-mail or write a letter to someone). Earn 5 points each time you complete the activity. Leave a small object as a “marker” on the square you land on, and roll again, moving forward from that square. Earn 20 bonus points each time you pass the “Start” square.

When you reach 1,000 points, give yourself a special reward—a trip, a book, a day away—but the most exciting reward will be the sense of vitality, community, and self-esteem you’ll gain through the activities themselves.

After participating in several courses, he is more enthused about doing art than ever before. About 35 years ago Bob enjoyed oil painting, but after having had a heart attack, he abandoned his hobby. Now Bob has been re-introduced to painting, this time watercolors, and as a result of taking the watercolor classes has purchased his own paints, brushes, paper, and DVDs for beginners. Bob credits his enthusiasm to his watercolor teacher, Anne Krocak from COMPAS, an arts partner for the Artful Living program. “She praised and encouraged everyone’s efforts no matter what. She inspired us and promoted carefree thinking,” Bob said.

Bob is featured on the front cover of this magazine at his recently created in-home painting studio. In the photo he is holding a painting that started out as just an exercise in class to paint hands but turned into something much more for Bob. “This is the first breakthrough I’ve had to really create something. It’s the first painting I’ve done that I can take credit for it being completely original and creative, and that’s what was important to me,” Bob proudly stated.

Creativity Matters

Incorporate creativity into your life for a healthier, happier you

by Christina Rhein

Artful Living

“Every child is an artist. The problem is how to remain an artist once we grow up.”

—Pablo Picasso

Although there can be many losses in later life, it may be surprising to learn that creativity is not one of them. In fact, studies show that creativity often flourishes as we grow older. In order to preserve our dignity and enhance our quality of life, Lyngblomsten promotes dignity through informed choices for living options, respecting individuality, and orchestrating the best life possible.

For our participants, Lyngblomsten promotes dignity through informed choices for living options, respecting individuality, and orchestrating the best life possible.

Bob Ogren, Watercolor Artist

Bob Ogren, a 90-year-old local community member, has participated in three watercolor classes through the Artful Living program. Bob’s wife talked him into trying the watercolor classes, and now he is thankful that she did. When he first started the classes, he intended to only attend one or two sessions to see what they were like. He continued on page 4.

New Year, Fresh Start
At the end of every year when the plans are laid out for the upcoming year, I think to myself, “This is going to be a big year for Lyngblomsten.” If that’s been true in the past, then 2012 is going to be a gargantuan year! There are new services launching (read about the early memory loss services on page 7), senior ministry and parish resources being built, a re-envisioned café and gift shop being planned (see page 9), physical plant improvements, and many, many more projects in the works—all designed to meet our mission of enhancing the quality of life for older adults. I look forward to sharing with you the stories of progress and impact.

The start of a new year often signals the start of transformations. Perhaps you noticed there is a new look to Lyngblomsten Lifestyle magazine. We are making some fairly significant changes to our publication and decided it was a good time to refresh the look as well. Based on feedback from our reader survey as well as our plan to fully embrace social media in the year ahead, we have modified the publication schedule for the print edition of Lifestyle, producing only two full issues annually plus a special (holiday) edition.

I am always so grateful to those people who invite us into their lives and allow us to share their stories with others. In this edition, we focus on creativity and aging. You’ll meet four older adults who talk about their involvement in our Artful Living with Lyngblomsten program (story begins on page 3). I hope their stories inspire you to embrace the arts and to infuse even more creativity into your life—be it through the arts or in other ways. Don’t miss the opportunities to learn more about creativity and aging presented on page 5.

May your 2012 be filled with many blessings, boundless creativity, and opportunities pursued.
