Dear Readers,

The grace of history. That phrase came to mind as I read through the collection of articles for this edition. Not many organizations have a century of service behind their names. Where would our organization be today without its rich history?

Treasured constants link the decades together—like a Christian mission and generous volunteers and donors. And, the innovative spirit that propelled the founding women to push forward with their dream is ever present today. Beyond providing necessary services, Lyngblomsten nourishes the human spirit. Just browse the pages of this edition to see how older adults create and contribute!

Our past provides a solid foundation and catalyst for meeting the complexities of today’s older adult population. Our deeply rooted call to innovation and quality drives the organization to prepare for the future where expectations will be much different from the days of our predecessors.

A century of history doesn’t hold us back or weigh us down. Instead, it resides gracefully in the background of the canvas where the Lyngblomsten story is being painted today.

Don’t just live; leave a legacy!

On the Cover: Historical photos from the Lyngblomsten archives tell the story of the Lyngblomsten Mid-Summer Festival, which has been a staple of the organization for more than a century.
A medley of laughter, music, and awe will soon waft through the Lyngblomsten campus as its annual Mid-Summer Festival takes place in July.

For more than a century, Lyngblomsten has invited visitors to the campus each summer to forge new connections and renew a sense of community among the organization, the surrounding Como Park neighborhood, and the greater metro area.

The Lyngblomsten Mid-Summer Festival has taken various forms and names over the years, but through these transitions, it has continued to offer a day of fun and meaningful engagement for people of all ages who attend.

Each summer, a new page is added to the festival’s long history of engaging the community. Its narrative weaves through many generations and remains as a testament to Lyngblomsten’s commitment to providing quality, life-enhancing opportunities for older adults.

STORIED PAST

The Lyngblomsten Mid-Summer Festival’s story begins more than a century ago, when the event first took shape in 1913. At the first annual meeting following the death of Lyngblomsten’s lead founder and first president, Anna Quale Fergstad, her friend and fellow founding woman Laura Bratager suggested a memorial be held on Fergstad’s birthday on February 4. The organization ultimately chose March 4, 1913, for the first festival.

On that day, Lyngblomsten members held a “big, beautiful ceremony” at the original Lyngblomsten Home for the Aged, according to secretary notes from the time. The memorial raised $150 for the organization’s Charity Fund, which was used to help older adults pay the Home’s required entrance fee of $500. Adjusted for inflation, the amount raised in 1913 would be a tidy sum of about $3,800 in today’s dollars.

The event, known then as Mindefest, which means “memorial celebration,” took place annually in the spring for a few years before its organizing committee shifted its timing to June. The reason for the adjustment was simple and reflected the practicality of its organizers.

“The date was changed because of the inconvenience to both visitors and occupants,” notes a commemorative booklet created for Lyngblomsten’s 30th anniversary. “There were no sidewalks about the place, and as a result, mud was tracked into the Home because of the early spring thaws and rains. This meant burdensome cleaning for the servants after the departure of the visitors.”

The change of date brought with it a change in name. Lyngblomsten members opted to call the event “Midsummer Festival.” The celebration became a highpoint of the season, with people across the Twin Cities converging on the Home to visit, listen to music and speeches performed from the Home’s pavilion, and eat the Norwegian dish of cream pudding called fløtegrøt, according to the anniversary booklet.

In an interview with Lyngblomsten conducted before her passing in 2004, St. Paul resident Helen Moberg recalled her mother, Lyngblomsten branch member Mary Rosness, tending the large kettles used to cook fløtegrøt.

Moberg also remembered one festival in particular that made newspaper headlines in 1920. Prior to the event, Lyngblomsten members successfully paid off the Home’s mortgage and had cause for celebration.

Later that year, a June 20 newspaper story announced the upcoming Midsummer Festival program, including a special entertainment feature: the burning of the mortgage to mark the Home being free of debt.

FOOD AND FUN

Over the decades, Midsummer Festival has attracted thousands to the Lyngblomsten campus.

During the early days, guests were served free refreshments with other items available for purchase. Donations of cakes, coffee, and cash from Lyngblomsten members and local businesses made it possible to serve visitors without charging.

“But the visitors have always been kind and have given a free-will offering,” the Lyngblomsten Thirtieth Anniversary booklet said.

How much coffee and cake did people donate? For the 1916 festival, historical records show members promised to bake 54 cakes and an unnamed local company offered to give the festival committee 20 pounds of coffee. For many years, Lyngblomsten’s member congregations also donated cakes for serving to attendees. In addition to cake and coffee, ice cream has been a staple of festival fare since its beginnings and through changes to the event’s name and format.

Starting in 1979, Lyngblomsten’s annual summertime celebration became known as Summer Festival, expanded to a multi-day event, and featured special outdoor events and activities each day under a big tent in the campus courtyard. The activities included bingo tournaments, picnics, worship services, variety shows, and, of course, ice cream socials.

Fløtegrøt, a creamy Norwegian pudding, was a long-running staple of the Lyngblomsten Midsummer Fest menu.
The 1984 Summer Festival introduced a County Fair day to the campus and included games, a visit from a clown, snow cones, popcorn, and even a taxidermist, according to a story in the Fall 1984 edition of the Life at Lyngblomsten newsletter. “Our own County Fair sure gave the State Fair a ‘run for its money!’” the story proclaimed.

In the late 1980s, Summer Festival gave way to a long-running series of Community Ice Cream Socials hosted on the Lyngblomsten campus each year and coordinated by former community center programs supported by Lyngblomsten. Like the festival, the themed socials featured live entertainment, food, games, and other activities. From the late 1980s to 2011, the ice cream socials were a highlight of summers on campus.

FAMILIAR NAME, NEW FOCUS

Almost a century after the festival’s inception, Lyngblomsten revived the name Lyngblomsten Mid-Summer Festival in 2011 and introduced a stronger focus on arts to the event. The following year, the festival became a part of ComoFest, an annual lineup of fun summer events located throughout the Como Park neighborhood in July.

From 2013 to 2015, Lyngblomsten applied for and received grant funding from the Minnesota State Arts Board to help cover costs for the event and allow it to grow, said Andrea Lewandoski, Director of Lifelong Learning and the Arts. During those three years, Lyngblomsten Mid-Summer Festival activities encompassed the Lyngblomsten campus and drew more than 2,000 people each summer. With state grant funding no longer available to the organization after 2015, staff took steps to trim back the festival and ensure it would be financially sustainable for future years.

More transitions were still ahead for the event. A rebranding effort in 2016 put arts and lifelong learning at the center of the annual celebration. The new focus included adding an arts showcase exhibiting the work of Lyngblomsten residents, tenants, and community program participants. The showcase includes a variety of mediums, including painting, ceramics, mixed media, prints, jewelry, poetry, and expressive arts.

“We wanted to incorporate the arts and lifelong learning showcase into the festival as a way to celebrate all of the gifts, talents, stories, and shared experiences of older adults who have engaged in lifelong learning and arts programs throughout the year,” Lewandoski said.

Wellness demonstrations, make-and-take art activities, live music and entertainment, games, food, and more also will be part of this year’s Lyngblomsten Mid-Summer Festival.

While the event has changed forms and names throughout the years, the Lyngblomsten Mid-Summer Festival still strives to bring the public into the world of Lyngblomsten for a day to celebrate the contributions of older adults to their communities.

New art gallery showcases creativity of Lyngblomsten community members

By Brandi Jewett

Vibrant paintings, stanzas of poetry, and more now brighten a previously nondescript corridor in the Lyngblomsten Care Center.

The pieces are new additions to the hallway, part of recently installed gallery spaces that showcase paintings, poetry, and mixed media arts created by Lyngblomsten residents, tenants, and community participants.

The first exhibit titled “Celebrate Life” made its debut in May during Older Americans Month. The new gallery is part of an increased effort to honor the creative and imaginative contributions that Lyngblomsten older adults make to their communities.

In the past, pieces of art have been put on display during the Lyngblomsten Mid-Summer Festival each year, but the new gallery space allows for even more artwork to be shown to the community year-round.

“It’s an opportunity to have things up throughout the year and create destination points on campus where the people who are participating in our programs can show their family members that their art is on display or their poetry is on display,” said Andrea Lewandoski, Lyngblomsten Director of Lifelong Learning and the Arts.

Exhibits will rotate through the gallery on a regular basis, typically monthly. Current plans include displaying a variety of pieces throughout the year, including art created with various mediums, poetry, and items that showcase creative activities held on campus, such as a photograph of program participants singing accompanied by a printout of lyrics to the song.

So far, the gallery on display in the care center’s first floor hallway is a hit, according to Lewandoski.

“Some people were just completely in awe that residents of the care center had done that work,” she added. “It’s an opportunity for people to see the residents and tenants in a different light, and I love that.”

Other areas identified for gallery installations are the hallway outside the Lyngblomsten Community Room, the hallway leading to the Lyngblomsten Apartments, and vestibules at The Heritage at Lyngblomsten. The Lyngblomsten Auxiliary Legacy Fund provided funding for the galleries’ art display system.

To visit the care center gallery, walk through Lyngblomsten’s main entrance at 1415 Almond Avenue in St. Paul, take a right at the reception desk, and then walk down the first hallway to the right. Visitors are welcome seven days a week from 8 AM to 9 PM.
MUSIC & MEMORY PROGRAM
MAKING POWERFUL IMPACT AT LYNGBLOMSTEN

By Brandi Jewett

The reaction varies by person when the music begins. Some find calm, some smile, and some find themselves swept away in a memory.

“I had a woman start crying while listening to a song, and I said, ‘Oh my gosh, are you okay?’” recalled Andrea Lewandoski, Director of Lifelong Learning and the Arts. “She said, ‘Yes, this was my husband and mine’s wedding song.’ It was a happy memory.”

The music creating this impact comes to Lyngblomsten residents and tenants through a program called Music & Memory®. Founded in 2010, the nonprofit Music & Memory works to bring personalized music programs to residents of long-term care facilities using iPods and other digital music players.

The program’s work is rooted in extensive neuroscience research that shows music can increase resident cooperation and attention, reduce resistance to care and agitation, and enhance engagement and socialization with others.

Lyngblomsten volunteer Andrew Tisell helps resident Jane Hanten with her Music & Memory iPod playlist.

“It’s great to see someone listening and feeling comfortable enough to move to the music, tap their toes, and even just swing in their chair,” said Lewandoski, who serves as a co-leader for the program. “It’s engaging so many parts of their brain.”

Lyngblomsten became a Music & Memory Certified Care Facility in 2015. After completing program training, staff piloted Music & Memory in the care center’s Stanford and Ostrand neighborhoods with memory care residents. Positive feedback pushed an expansion of the program throughout campus.

At Lyngblomsten, iPods containing personalized playlists are stored for each program participant. While most participants use headphones to listen, not all enjoy them. In response, Lyngblomsten also offers small speakers that can be placed on a table or tucked into neck pillows, shirt pockets, and specially designed stuffed animals.

“Headphones are not an obstacle here,” said Shelli Beck, who serves as Lyngblomsten’s Lead Volunteer Coordinator and a co-leader of the Music & Memory program.

Volunteers play an integral role in keeping playlists current, acquiring new music, and helping residents play music. To create a custom playlist, volunteers talk with residents, tenants, and sometimes their family members about favorite types of music, memories associated with certain songs, and the importance it holds for them.

For many program participants, the memories tied to music can be soothing during times of stress and transition, whether it’s moving from one room to another or adjusting from a home setting to a care center.

“How often do we listen to music in our daily life? Every drive to and from work. Maybe every time you make dinner the radio is on,” Beck said. “How often is music there and then all of a sudden you come to a place like this and there’s no background music? To have your own is powerful.”

For the past 55 years, the Lyngblomsten Care Center has welcomed older adults of all backgrounds through its doors. This summer, it will welcome construction crews tasked with giving the building a major facelift. The nearly $9 million renovation project will update residents rooms, common areas, building infrastructure, and landscaping with a goal of increasing the care center’s functionality and aesthetics.

Changes have been made to the care center since construction of the North Building in 1963 and the South Building in 1977, including an expansion in the 1980s (dining rooms and chapel) and a 2003 remodeling project that transformed resident common areas into smaller neighborhoods.

Resident rooms were not updated during the 2003 remodel, but they are a main focus of the current renovation project. Lyngblomsten residents have been actively involved in the planning process and have weighed in on choices for décor and other aspects of the room remodeling.

Common areas in neighborhoods also will see changes intended to make them homier and encourage residents to linger and use the space throughout the day with family, friends, and one another.

“My hope is to design the dining rooms so they could be used between meals as spaces for people to gather over a cup of coffee, to play a game of cards together, or have a quiet place to visit and share memories or maybe do an art project together,” said Care Center Administrator Brenda Johnson. “This transforms all corners of our building into intentional space for gatherings.”

Lyngblomsten residents and visitors also will be greeted by new additions to the care center’s main lobby and outdoor areas. The main lobby will be remodeled and a fireplace installed. Outside, a beautifully landscaped park-like island will be created near the main entrance to the care center, which will include shaded seating areas.

Upgrades to the care center’s infrastructure also are part of the renovation. Maintenance and system upgrades will include items such as repairing the care center building exterior, replacing windows, and replacing the emergency generator.

Lyngblomsten has secured 25-year conduit revenue bonds to cover the majority of the renovation costs. A fundraising campaign by the Lyngblomsten Foundation will provide a portion of the funding. Construction begins this summer and is expected to be completed in early 2020.
Admission & Tickets:
Admission to the Lyngblomsten Mid-Summer Festival is FREE! Admission includes the arts showcase and all music and entertainment. Tickets are 50 cents each and are needed for food, games, and make-&-take art activities. Tickets can be purchased in advance at the Lyngblomsten Care Center reception desk July 13–19 or on site at the festival. Cash and checks accepted.

Winning art selected for Lyngblomsten greeting card project

By Brandi Jewett

The work of Lyngblomsten art program participants will grace the covers of a new set of greeting cards to be used by Lyngblomsten.

Art class participants were invited to submit original artwork during Older Americans Month in May.

“Lyngblomsten residents, tenants, and community participants are discovering the possibility of vibrant living as they age by exploring and engaging in a variety of creative and educational programs offered through Lyngblomsten,” said Andrea Lewandoski, Director of Lifelong Learning and the Arts. “We at Lyngblomsten are proud to display the creative works as a testament that getting older is not so much about aging as it is about choosing to thrive.”

Winners of the Lyngblomsten art competition were selected in early June by a panel of staff. Designs were chosen in three categories: general greeting card, thank-you card, and sympathy card. In all, 17 pieces were submitted by residents, tenants, and community participants from a variety of art programs. All submissions will be on display at the Lyngblomsten Mid-Summer Festival in the Arts & Lifelong Learning Showcase. Thank you to everyone who contributed artwork!

New respite services are set to make a big impact this year in the lives of older adults with memory loss and their caregivers.

Lyngblomsten Community Services received a $132,000 grant from the Minnesota Department of Human Services to provide in-home respite services through the department’s Live Well at Home program. Live Well at Home grants help older Minnesotans remain in their homes rather than move to nursing homes or other more expensive settings.

With the grant money, Lyngblomsten is launching pilot programs this year for in-home respite services that include in-person and virtual visits from trained volunteers. In addition, each caregiver will work with Lyngblomsten Respite Program Development Coordinator Jeanne Schuller, LSW, MSW, to put an emergency respite plan together. Respite is short-term relief for caregivers that allows them to take a break from their caregiving duties.

While caregivers step away, volunteers called in-home respite companions will step in and engage with older adults through one-on-one interactions that encourage building and maintaining meaningful relationships.

“There’s an isolation that happens when you have a progressive health issue like dementia,” Schuller said. “People can feel lonely, and this gives them another opportunity to have a friend who they can interact and find meaning with.”

The in-home respite program will be facilitated through 2nd Half with Lyngblomsten, enrichment centers located in St. Paul and White Bear Lake that take an integrative approach to supporting adults aging well in their communities. In June 2018, 2nd Half with Lyngblomsten began providing in-home respite services to a small group of caregivers and care partners who currently attend The Gathering group respite program in Roseville or White Bear Lake. If this pilot program is effective and sustainable, it would be opened up to other participants and caregivers served by 2nd Half with Lyngblomsten.

A trained volunteer for the in-person respite care program will visit the home of an older adult with memory loss once a week for two to three hours. During the visit, the volunteer will engage the person in stimulating and meaningful activities.

As part of the pilot program, volunteers receive training through Lyngblomsten, which offers a nationally recognized, evidence-supported program called REST® (Respite Education & Support Tools). The training provides individuals with the education and tools they need to be confident and successful respite companions. Lyngblomsten will recruit, screen, and train these volunteers to ensure they are well prepared to provide this important service. REST® training also will be made available to family members and friends who are interested in supporting caregivers by providing informal respite visits.

Once this offering is developed and running, 2nd Half with Lyngblomsten will turn to developing virtual respite services provided on a short-term basis from a remote location. A pilot program would explore this new model of respite care with the same group of caregivers and participants.

“Technology is going to have to play a role in how we care for people just because of the large number of people who will need care,” Schuller said. “Families don’t always live in the same area; technology can be a tool for keeping families connected and supporting the primary caregiver.”

The in-home respite program is still in need of volunteers. If interested, contact Lyngblomsten Volunteer Services at (651) 632-5406 or volunteer@lyngblomsten.org. For information about the program, contact Jeanne Schuller, Respite Program Development Coordinator, at (651) 632-5320 or jschuller@lyngblomsten.org.
Lyngblomsten is currently in need of volunteers for the following activities:

- Special Event Volunteer Opportunities: Get involved with the Lyngblomsten Mid-Summer Festival on July 20 through a variety of opportunities at the event. Or, accompany residents on an outing to the Minnesota State Fair.

- Resident Mobility: Transport residents to and from in-house appointments (physical therapy, dental, beauty shop, or foot doctor) and provide a friendly word and encouragement along the way. Flexible hours.

- Arts Activities: Help residents and tenants explore their creative sides while you volunteer as an art activity assistant. Ceramics, music, mixed media, and storytelling class assistants are needed. No experience necessary; on-site training is provided.

The group met twice a month from the end of January to mid-April. About 25 to 30 people attended each session, with a ratio of nearly one older adult to one student.

At each session, participants engaged in small- and large-group discussions that reflected their lived experiences, aspirations, and perspectives on life, and they completed individual and group activities.

Lyngblomsten Apartments tenants Joyce Danner and Susan Robinson attended the sessions and said they enjoyed speaking with young people. Both women found the college students’ optimism toward their future refreshing in a world where negativity can seem to dominate headlines.

“We weren’t really sure what would come of it but thought that it would be amazing to have young people talking with seniors,” Lyngblomsten Apartments Manager Jill Hult said.

“I think it really improved my attitude,” Robinson said of the students’ positivity.

She and Danner both have young grandchildren, so engaging with students in their 20s was a new but meaningful experience for them. They recalled some students mentioned not having older adults present in their lives, and they too found themselves in unfamiliar waters when speaking with Lyngblomsten tenants.

In March, April, and May, a total of 427 volunteers (including volunteers for The Gathering) gave 7,918 hours of service. Another 117 group volunteers gave 778 hours.

Upcoming New Volunteer Orientations:
- Wednesday, July 11, from 4:30–6:30 PM
- Tuesday, August 7, from 6–8 PM
- Saturday, September 15, from 10 AM–Noon

To learn more or register for new volunteer orientation, contact Peggy Cerrito at (651) 632-5406 or pcerrito@lyngblomsten.org, or visit www.lyngblomsten.org/volunteer.
How we behave can be influenced by the assumptions at work in our minds—assumptions of which we may not be aware. I like to compare them to obnoxious spyware that our computers pick up from time to time, programs that are active in the background unbeknownst to us, affecting our data processing, controlling what we perceive before us, and moving us toward acting and responding in a particular way.

Just as it is important to do a sweep on the computer routinely to recognize and remove any unwanted spyware, so too is it important once in a while to see what assumptions may be at work in our own lives influencing our behaviors. It may sound strange, but it is true.

I encourage you to run an assumption check sometime about a behavior you do. Ask yourself why you did it. What was the thought or experience that motivated you to take that particular action? Once you have that answer, ask yourself “Why?” again. Keep asking “Why?” until you come to the root assumption at work. Finally, ask yourself if that assumption is true. You may be surprised to discover that the assumption you’ve been operating under for so long is false or no longer true, yet it is still influencing how you see and interact with the world! Assumptions are powerful.

So, I’m curious. How do our assumptions guide our behavior related to charitable giving and volunteerism? For instance, what subconscious messages may be running in the background of your mind regarding philanthropy? Who is or can be a philanthropist? How do you see yourself in regard to philanthropy?

I don’t know if you are like me, but at one time I associated philanthropy with being wealthy, and therefore, I never viewed myself as a philanthropist. That assumption operating in the background made me behave in a way that devalued my own gifts.

But that untrue assumption is no longer at play in my life. Fortunately, I have learned philanthropists come in all shapes and sizes and giving capacities. According to the Merriam-Webster dictionary, a philanthropist is someone who makes an active effort to promote human welfare. In Greek, philanthropist simply means lover of mankind. You’ll note that these definitions do not say that one has to give a certain amount of money to be a philanthropist. Rather, it is a condition of the heart: loving mankind, intending to seek the welfare of one’s neighbor.

Philanthropists, in their true definition, make the Lyngblomsten community so special and accessible to all, helping ensure that all older adults have the support and care that they may need along their journey. As we step into a bold future to renovate the Lyngblomsten Care Center and expand our services through 2nd Half with Lyngblomsten, we are acting philanthropically. And we will need more philanthropists than ever—philanthropists who come in all shapes, sizes, and capacities of giving!

Who, me? A philanthropist? Yes, I am a philanthropist, and I hope you see yourself as one too! Together, our love for older adults and their caregivers makes a powerful difference in their world.
Corporate Connections
By Tim Overweg, Director of Community Engagement

Huron Consulting recently brought a group of 18 volunteers to our campus, hoping to enjoy some time at Como Zoo with some of Lyngblomsten’s animal-loving residents. Unfortunately, the weather didn’t cooperate, so everyone stayed indoors and enjoyed some fierce competition with board games.

Even though the weather was damp and cold, spirits were just the opposite. Volunteers’ comments included:

“We had an awesome time even though the weather didn’t permit a trip to the zoo.” “What a great use of my time.” “I am delighted to have the opportunity to meet your residents.”

And the kind words flowed in reverse as well. Many Lyngblomsten staff remarked how impressed they were with the willingness of these volunteers to adapt to the change in plans and their gracious and kind interactions.

This kind of volunteer magic happens often. We have many corporate groups that engage with Lyngblomsten, and we are grateful to be the recipient of their service. We never take them for granted and do our best to provide for a well-planned, worthwhile, and enjoyable volunteer experience. The highest compliment we can receive is when an organization returns. And many do.

Kudos to every corporate volunteer who contributes to the liveliness and appeal of Lyngblomsten. Atta boy to every employee who makes these volunteers feel welcome and appreciated. Mission accomplished.

LYNGBLOMSTEN FOUNDATION SPRING GALA RAISES $113,000 TO BENEFIT SERVICES FOR PEOPLE WITH MEMORY LOSS, CAREGIVERS

More than 250 people turned out to support services for people with memory loss and their caregivers at the annual Lyngblomsten Foundation Spring Gala on April 20.

The event raised about $113,000 to support programming offered through 2nd Half with Lyngblomsten. Karla Hult, a veteran anchor and reporter for KARE 11, hosted the evening and shared the story of her father’s Alzheimer’s diagnosis and her family’s journey with him.

Thank you to everyone involved who helped make the evening a success, including our generous sponsors.
